Battle at home rages on

After 7 years, 93 soldiers lives and $7B, Canadians still split on Afghan war

LAURA EGGERTSON
for Metro Canada

As Canada approaches the tragic milestone of 100 soldiers killed in Afghanistan, voices across the country debate the rising cost, both human and economic, of a conflict that rivals the Second World War in length.

In October 2001, Canada joined the U.S.-led War on Terrorism by launching Operation Apollo in response to the attack on the Twin Towers in New York City. To date, more than 20,000 Canadian Forces personnel have served in Afghanistan's shifting sands, with some soldiers on their second or third tours of duty.

Canada has lost 93 soldiers, diplomat Glyn Berry, and aid workers Shirley Case and Jacqueline Kirk. Close to 300 soldiers have been wounded in action.

"From an army as small as Canada's ... that's a lot of people," says Martin Shadwick, a defence analyst at Toronto's York University.

As of March 31, according to the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, Canada has spent more than $7 billion on the war, including salaries, food and equipment for troops. Those figures are based on the Defence Department's budgetary Estimates to Parliament.

Those opposed to the war question whether Canada is meeting its definitions of success. "All of the arguments — restoring democracy, defending women's rights — none of these things have happened," says James Clark of the Toronto Coalition to Stop the War.

But other organizations, including Canadian Women for Women in Afghanistan, insist Canadians make a difference. "Yes, it is worth it," says Janis Rapchuk, of the Calgary-based organization.

She cites the increasing number of children in schools and women taking human rights, literacy, computer and teachers' training. Pollsters say Canadians are divided about Canada's presence in Afghanistan, with a slight majority favouring withdrawal if the Canadian casualty count grows. The intensity of those positions will likely deepen with further casualties, says Nik Nanos, president of Nanos Research.

Maximum sentence miffs mom

The woman behind the wheel of a school bus that crashed into a dump truck, killing nine-year-old Katelynn Occena and injuring several others was dealt a $2,300 fine.

Louise Rogers pleaded guilty to careless driving and was sentenced to the maximum $2,000 fine, a $300 victim fine surcharge, a 90-day driving prohibition and a year of probation at provincial court in Calgary yesterday.

"The law here in Canada is a joke," the victim's mother Genevieve Occena told reporters outside court. "It is unfair. I lost a daughter and all she got was a $2,000 fine and 90 days driving prohibition."

The impact of the crash sheered the right side off the bus and injured several students heading to Mountain View Academy Oct. 18, 2007.

Calgary boards report few issues as new year kicks off

Thousands of Calgary students were back in class yesterday and it was business as usual according to school officials.

Ted Flitton, spokesperson for the Calgary Board of Education, told Metro an estimated 100,580 public school students were back at it yesterday.

“Everyone is happy to be back.”

“Everyone is happy to be back and we’re looking forward to the new school year,” he said.

Flitton said the schools, parents and students are still trying to deal with the bus driver shortage but he is hoping a pilot project helps ease the burden.

Mom Cindy Verot with her sons Triston, 10, and Aidan, 7, head to Red Deer Lake School for their first day of school. Nearly 145,000 Calgary kids headed into a new school year yesterday.

“We started allowing some drivers (to) keep their buses at the school in their community last year instead of driving to and from the headquarters, and it worked out well so we have expanded that this year.”

Janet Sutherland, spokesperson for the Catholic School board said about 44,000 students in that system also headed back to school without anything extraordinary.

City cops were also out in

MackKay pans Grits in lead up to election call

DEFENCE As federal politicians hit the premature campaign trail with the writ expected to drop as early as Friday, Defence Minister Peter MacKay took aim at the Liberals yesterday after a presentation in Calgary, questioning their commitment to Canada’s armed forces.

“I hope that other parties, rather than sniping from the cheap seats in opposition, will pronounce themselves on where they will stand in terms of continuing this momentum and support for the Canadian forces,” MacKay said, noting substantial Conservative investment while both the Liberals and NDP have stood silent.

MacKay said other than unelected Liberal Senator Colin Kenny, who has been critical of Conservative moves on national emergency preparedness and military budgets, he has heard little from Liberal party leadership.

"It's also a way for people to understand these women who are not readily visible and need a safe place to call home."

Local celebrities gather at the event and have some fun walking around in pink shoes, high heel shoes, slippers — anything a woman wears, these men will wear.

"It's just a blast. The key

TRANSIT If you see it, report it — that's the message city cops and peace officers are partnering up to educate transit riders during a safety blitz this month.

Just in time for back to school, the Calgary police and transit public safety enforcement launched the 10th annual safety awareness campaign yesterday at the Chinook platform.

"We're dedicated to public safety and we're just trying to remind and educate riders about the rules of the platform," Insp. Blair White of district 8.

He added if riders witness something unusual, they should alert officers.

The blitz will put more uniformed and plains clothes officers on platforms and inside trains during the month, an idea transit rider Kim Jones is pleased with.

"I think it's pretty exciting. It will not only help low-income pet owners, but that, in turn, ends up helping the whole city and reduce costs," he added.

Canada's Mission in Afghanistan

Homecoming wave of relief

Edmonton soldiers returning from Afghanistan to get hero's welcome

JEFF CUMMINGS
Metro Canada

They have served their country proudly, and now they are about to return to a hero's welcome.

Starting tomorrow night, and continuing over the next six weeks, the roughly 1,200 Edmonton Garrison soldiers stationed in Afghanistan are due to rotate home.

To mark the occasion, Edmontonians are tying the city up in yellow: Ribbons will festoon trees, street lamps, power poles and houses.

"These men and women have been away from their families and community for so long and they've been through such inconceivable challenges and stress," said military wife Carolyn Patton.

Patton, the wife of a medical officer currently serving in Afghanistan, has had a ribbon tied in front of her home since her husband left for the mission in February.

"I know when I go to work that I will undoubtedly make it home alive," said Patton in a statement. "I can't imagine how soldiers live with the knowledge, day to day, that this might not be the case for them."

Soldiers from the 1 Royal Canadian Regiment Battle Group begin the foot patrol into Parmaluk in this photo from 2006. Soldiers from Edmonton Garrison will be returning home from their Afghan mission beginning this week.

The costs of war have been brought home to the soldiers and families of Edmonton Garrison all too often since Canada's mission in Afghanistan began.

On April 18, 2002, four Edmonton soldiers were the first to die there in a well-publicized "friendly-fire" incident when U.S. pilot Maj. Harry Schmidt dropped a 500-pound bomb on a Canadian training exercise. Eight other soldiers were injured.

Last month, four Edmonton-based soldiers died in Afghanistan in two separate incidents, adding to Canada's count of 93 soldiers felled in battle.

Three soldiers were killed, another seriously injured when a massive roadside bomb blasted their armoured vehicle while on patrol in Zharey District.

The three soldiers were combat engineers with 12 Field Squadron, 1 Combat Regiment from Edmonton. While serving in Afghanistan, they were part of the Second Battalion Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry Battle Group.

A husband and father of two young daughters, Sgt. Shawn Allen Eades was one of the three who died Aug. 20. The other two fallen soldiers are Cpl. Dustin Wasden, who was laid to rest today in Spiritwood, Sask., and Sapper Stephan John Stock.

Earlier last month, on Aug. 11, Cpl. Erin Doyle was killed in a firefist in Panjwahi district.

The relief will be felt across the city as the soldiers begin coming home after this deployment.

"There will be a reception planned Thursday night for them ... and we cannot stress how the community has been in supporting our troops," said Second Lt. Wright Eruebi, a spokesman with Canada's National Defence department.

Although an official time has yet to be announced, Eruebi said the welcome-home reception for the troops will kick off at the Field House in the Garrison Thursday night.

The reception promises to be a fitting tribute to the soldiers who sacrificed so much for their country.

Challenges remain for women in Afghanistan

KATE CARRAWAY
for Metro Canada

Any military conflict will be riddled with underlying political and social issues, but some wars reveal and challenge tremendous and long-standing problems. Such is the case with women's rights in Afghanistan.

Lauryn Oates is a Vancouver-based project director with the Canadian Women for Women in Afghanistan organization and a freelance consultant on gender equity and human rights. When asked about the specific challenges that women in Afghanistan face, Oates says the implications of Afghan customs on women's lives are serious.

"Girls may not be permitted to study at the secondary level, or women may not be allowed to leave their homes unaccompanied by a male relative,"

Sgt. Roxanne Clowe from the Canadian Provincial Reconstruction Team visits with an Afghan woman and a child.

she said. Oates added that most marriages in Afghanistan are forced and often imposed on young, pre-pubescent girls. Domestic abuse is also an ongoing, systemic problem.

Oates believes hope exists, though.

"The lifting of the Taliban's many misogynist edicts changed things significantly," she said. "There were previously no girls in school except for a minuscule number in clandestine home schools, or attending schools in refugee camps in Peshawar. Now there are millions of girls back in school. Women can access health care now (they were forbidden from doing so under the Taliban)."

As dust settles, father's resolve remains strong

LINDSAY JONES
Metro Canada

Despite a death toll that continues to mount, the father of one fallen soldier from Nova Scotia says it only strengthens his resolve.

Jim Davis, whose son Cpl. Paul Davis was the first to die under Canadian command in 2006, says 93 soldiers is an awful price to pay, but the Afghan people need the chance to live in peace.

"You do question yourself — am I too caught up in it, too emotional?" said Davis. "But as the dust settles and the more I learn about the mission the more I become convinced. ... If we don't stay the course then we might as well pack it in from anywhere in the world and go home."

Facts on Canada's Afghan mission

Currently serving:

2,500 Canadian Forces personnel in Afghanistan, part of the NATO-led International Security Assistance Force.

Past service: Close to 20,000 Forces personnel have served in Afghanistan.

Canadian deaths: 93 soldiers

Diplomats killed: Glyn Berry, as a result of a car bomb Jan. 15, 2006, when he was travelling southeast of Kandahar City.

Aid workers killed: Jacqueline Kirk and Shirley Case, Aug. 13, 2008.

Afghan civilians killed: The Canadian Defence Department does not keep figures on the number of Afghans killed or injured, says spokesperson Lt. Isabelle Riché. University of New Hampshire professor Marc Herold, tallying the deaths from public sources, puts the figures at 6,465 (conservative estimate) to 7,689 Afghan civilians killed as a direct result of U.S./NATO actions between October 2001 and Aug. 29, 2008.

Canadian soldiers injured: 280 wounded in action, as of Dec. 31, 2007; 395 non-battle-related injuries while serving in Afghanistan.

Full cost: $7 billion as of March 31, 2008, according to the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, based on Defence Department Estimates; includes cost of feeding, transporting and equipping Canadian Forces' personnel.

Incremental cost (operational cost): $3 billion.

Duration of mission:

The Harper government has said Canada will stay in Afghanistan until 2011.

Other coalition forces:

40 nations have contributed troops, including the United States, Germany, the United Kingdom, Australia and Italy.

Children in school: 7 million today, versus 1.2 million in 2001. Today, 2 million of those schoolchildren are girls, according to NATO's International Security Assistance Force.

Access to health care:

Up to 83 per cent of Afghans have access to basic health care, according to NATO, versus 8 per cent in 2001.

Tories within reach of majority: Poll

Liberal leader Stéphane Dion dismissed a poll yesterday that showed he was headed for defeat in an election expected for next month, saying he was determined to win.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper, whose Conservatives won a minority government in January 2006, is expected to request the dissolution of Parliament this week and call an election for Oct. 14.

A Strategic Counsel poll showed the Conservatives had the backing of 37 per cent of voters, close to the 40 per cent threshold that experts say gives them a strong chance of winning a majority.

"Polls are like surveys.

Economy over environment

• The Strategic Counsel poll said 15 per cent of voters felt the environment would be the most important issue in the forthcoming election compared with 20 per cent who were most concerned by the slowing economy.

They come and they go. What remains is our determination to win this election for Canadians," Dion told reporters in Regina, Saskatchewan.

Strategic Counsel put the Liberals at 29 per cent and the New Democrats at 17.

The environmentalist Greens came in with 9 per cent.

Recent surveys by other polling companies showed the two top parties were tied.

Harper, who says Parliament has become dysfunctional, met Dion on Monday and asked him to back the government until October 2009.

Dion refused and said Harper and the Tories want to go to the polls before Canada feels the full effect of the U.S. economic slowdown.

Feds offering war veterans compensation

NUCLEAR The federal government said yesterday it would spend up to $24 million compensating veterans forced to be exposed to Cold War-era nuclear blasts but never recognized for their sacrifices.

The recognition of Canada's so-called atomic veterans, which comes days before an expected election call, also extends to military personnel who decontaminated an Ontario nuclear plant in the 1950s after two reactor accidents.

Earlier this year, some of the veterans launched a class-action lawsuit against Ottawa, saying many had suffered and died from the effects of radiation.

"We simply felt that now was the time to deliver on this commitment to see a form of financial recognition, but more importantly public acknowledgment, of the tremendous contribution that atomic veterans made to the security of our country," Defence Minister Peter MacKay said. REUTERS

Greens prepared to go to court over debates

POLITICS Green Party Leader Elizabeth May's fight to get a spot in the televised leaders' debates could wind up in the courts.

The Green Party has hired Toronto lawyer Peter Rosenthal to press May's case and is suggesting it could to resort to legal action to make sure the party leader is able to join the four other political leaders for the election debates.

"The question is still up in the air, as we understand it, and the legal questions are pretty important. We want to have a focus on those. These are public airwaves. The airwaves belong to no private network," May said in an interview yesterday.

Dion to adjust Green Shift

CARBON TAX Stéphane Dion is moving to fine-tune his much-disputed carbon tax with up to $1 billion in promised aid for truckers, farmers, fishing boat owners and others who would feel the direct impact of higher fuel costs under the Liberal leader's environmental plan.

Dion, who is in Winnipeg for a three-day caucus retreat, will today begin announcing changes to his Green Shift proposal, which Liberals admit has prompted alarm among some Canadians.

But the Liberal leader denied he is being forced to water down his proposed "green" strategy to make it saleable in an election campaign expected to be launched this week or over the weekend with an eye on Oct. 14 as an election date.

"On the contrary, we will strengthen it," Dion said, explaining the changes to the Green Shift plan first unveiled in June. "It will be better for the environment."

New Orleans' 1.9 million evacuees to return

Workers fanned out across New Orleans yesterday to clean up after Hurricane Gustav, but officials told hundreds of thousands of evacuees to stay away a bit longer.

Half of New Orleans still lacked power and the sewage system was damaged. But floodwaters from Gustav ebbed, easing pressure on the storm barriers that failed during Hurricane Katrina in 2005.

Louisiana officials reported six storm-related deaths. With 1.4 million homes and businesses affected, officials said the 1.9 million evacuated citizens must stay away. Business owners will be allowed back into New Orleans today, and residents on Thursday.

Army refuses to use force

Thai soldiers would not use force to evict protesters occupying the prime minister's office, army chief Anupong Paochinda said yesterday despite a state of emergency giving him the power to do so.

"If we thought we could use police and soldiers to get them out with a peaceful conclusion, we would do it. But we think that that would create more problems," he told reporters after a man died in clashes between pro- and anti-government protesters.

The emergency powers invoked by Prime Minister Samak Sundaravej banned public meetings, declared government buildings off limits, and restricted media reports that incite unrest.

The state of emergency is the culmination of more than 100 days of street protests by an anti-govern-

Global warming may cut plague cases: Study

CLIMATE Rare outbreaks of plague in the United States seem to match climate shifts over the Pacific Ocean in a hint that global warming may make the region too hot and dry for the disease, scientists said today.

Feared as the "Black Death" of the 14th century that killed an estimated 50 million people, plague is still a threat mainly in Africa. The western United States has had 430 cases since 1950, or about seven per year.

The scientists, based in Norway, the United States and Sweden, said the number of U.S. infections seemed to vary with a natural shift between warm and cool ocean conditions known as the Pacific Decadal Oscillation (PDO) that can last 20-30 years.

Until now, researchers had been unable to explain swings in the number of cases — ranging from 40 in 1983 at a warm part of the PDO to almost none in the 1950s, a cool phase. The plague bacteria is spread to humans by fleas living on rats.

"Periods of high plague activity are likely to decrease in the western United States over the coming decades, especially in the active four corners region — New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona and Utah," the study said. REUTERS

Oil tumbles after Gustav

Canadian energy stocks, including heavyweights Suncor Energy and Imperial Oil, tumbled with oil and gas prices yesterday after initial assessments showed hurricane Gustav spared major U.S. Gulf production facilities.

Oil fell 5 per cent to $109.71 US a barrel, and natural gas futures skidded 8.6 per cent to $7.261 per million British thermal units.

Canadian spot natural gas in Alberta sank to an eight-month low, averaging $6.13 per gigajoule.

Oil could get stuck in the current range, assuming minimal storm damage to Gulf facilities and slack demand for crude amid the weak U.S. economy. Work-

But natural gas prices may be in for a further slide, with inventories climbing quickly after moderate North American weather in the second half of August.

Gillick set to soar back to Jays?

World championship architect could postpone retirement: Source

Decision-makers in the Blue Jays' hierarchy are seriously thinking of going back to the future. Again. Sources tell Metro the Jays' ownership is privately pondering the idea of bringing back Pat Gillick to Toronto after this season. Gillick would either work directly under or replace his long-time friend, Jays president Paul Godfrey. And, before you go off snickering about this, I'll remind you that these same sources told us back on May 13 that Cito Gaston was a possibility to be rehired as the Jays' manager. That was five weeks before it actually happened. (Look that up at metronews.ca if you'd like a reminder.) Gillick, of course, was the Jays' general manager during their halcyon days, including their World Series years in 1992 and 1993. He is planning to retire as the Philadelphia Phillies' GM after this season. As MLB insider Ken Rosenthal reported recently, though, "Gillick is a baseball lifer. Even though he is 71, few envision him walking away." Godfrey's contract expires after the season. J.P. Ricciardi's pact as the Jays'

Blue Jays get rookie off hook

Blue Jays 7 Twins 5

MLB This was something of an out-of-character night for David Purcey and the Blue Jays' offence. The young lefty failed to replicate his brilliant start last week in Tampa — an 11-strikeout complete game — lasting just three innings last night against the visiting Minnesota Twins. Purcey left an untidy scoreboard, a 5-1 deficit which appeared insurmountable given the fact the Twins protect leads very well and are locked in a battle for first with the White Sox in the AL's Central Division. But the Jays, with the third-lowest home run total in the AL, erupted for 17 hits, including three home runs in the fifth and sixth innings, to claim a 7-5 victory. The Jays have struggled in the homer department all season but had everyone fooled last night. Their efforts included back-to-back shots in the fifth by Jose Bautista and Alex Rios and a two-run shot in the sixth from Lyle Overbay that put them up 6-5.

Caliber SRT4 delivers big bang for the buck without compromising fun

B. MCLAUCHLAN
for Metro Canada

You could say Dodge's Caliber SRT4 is one case where the marketing message meets the metal.

Its snout is bold and sculpted, as is the rear. Large headlamps and tail lamps dominate the corners. Prominent, squared shoulders and protruding wheel arches give the impression the SRT4 is larger than it actually is and help contribute to a tough-guy stance too.

Right, let's get the bread-and-butter stuff on the table first. You can get your Caliber in lesser SE, SXT and R/T trim. The SE and SXT get a 148 hp, 1.8-litre 'four' mated to a five-speed manual transmission.

Their optional automatic is a continuously variable transmission (CVT), which must be mated to the 2.0-litre four-cylinder engine. The sporty R/T combines the CVT with a 172 hp, 2.4-litre four. Prices run in the $16,000 to $22,000 range. Incidentally, all-wheel-drive is available on the R/T model.

But when Dodge's Street Racing Technology ... get it, SRT? ... gang created the $24,995 SRT4, they stuffed in a 285 hp, 2.4-litre turbocharged four-banger and a six-speed stick to strike fear into the heart of god-fearing church-going Anyone looking for great value, great performance and innovative features, the Caliber measures up.

2009 Dodge Caliber SRT4

Type: Compact 5-passenger hatchback FWD
Price: $24,995
Engine: 2.4-litre I4 DOHC turbo
HP: 285 @ 5,700 rpm
Torque: 265 @ 2,000 – 5,600 rpm

econoboxes of all stripes.

At $26,170, as tested, our SRT4 included Goodyear F1 performance tires on polished wheels ($250) and a $925 Option group comprising mostly minor and frivolous frills.

Inside, the SRT4 doesn't seem like a compact. The front compartment is quite roomy, and the 60/40-split rear seats are comfortable enough for two. Legroom is limited for the middle passenger because of the floor-mounted cupholders.

If you're tall enough, you can lever down the driver's seat for a classic legs-out, low-slung sports car driving position.

If you need a lift to see out, however, the manual pump-action seat adjuster trades thigh support for seat height in a way that might not suit all body types.

But the best thing about this hot Caliber, apart from its bang for the buck, is its exhilarating combination of rapid acceleration, good shift action, informative steering, firmly cushioned (if a bit choppy) ride, terrific handling and satisfying hard-edged snarl from the exhaust system. But, be advised, torque steer is at times prodigious, as is the front end's tendency to 'wash out' if you get on the power too soon in mid-turn; mid-corner bumps can also unsettle it and the optional F1 tires aren't too happy with wet pavement.

That said, anyone looking for great value, reasonable fuel economy, great performance, versatile storage capacity and innovative features, the Caliber measures up.

Modern technology makes diesel myths history

Would you consider buying a clean diesel passenger vehicle? What if owning a clean diesel vehicle translated into savings for your pocket book and helped protect the environment, without sacrificing vehicle performance?

Many car owners still have outdated perceptions of diesels. Today's diesel passenger vehicles are fuel efficient, clean and provide drivers with greater performance than comparable gasoline vehicles. You could call this diesel advantage: Good, Clean, Fun.

Good

Diesel passenger vehicles offer 30 per cent better fuel economy, on average, compared to gasoline passenger vehicles, which means drivers make fewer trips to the pump. As a matter of fact, consumers save money every time they go to the pump even though diesel fuel prices are currently higher when compared to gasoline.

Clean

Diesel-powered vehicles, when compared to their gasoline counterparts, benefit the environment by reducing greenhouse gas emissions by up to 25 per cent. Today's clean diesel vehicles comply with all government emission regulations. With particulate filters, what comes out of the tailpipe (exhaust gas) typically contains fewer particles than the air entering the vehicle's engine — the particulate filter literally acts as a cleaner.

Cars such as this diesel-powered Jetta SportsWagen give the much-maligned fuel a good name.

Fun

Diesels offer a premium performance experience due to a 50 per cent increase in torque (especially at low rpm) — the force that allows cars to accelerate smoothly and powerfully — compared to gasoline passenger vehicles.

This premium performance experience includes increased acceleration and power at the point of acceleration as well as an ability to tow heavier loads for longer periods of time, compared to gasoline vehicles.

Diesel engines are a durable, fuel-efficient and eco-friendly powertrain option that provides superior performance. For drivers who want to save money at the pump without sacrificing their driving experience, diesel is a great option.

If other cars in this "hot hatch" class are satisfying to drive fast, the MazdaSpeed3 is truly and deeply rewarding.

Highway hero

Mazdaspeed3 a sweet little road rocket

B. MCCLAUCHLAN
for Metro Canada

2009 Mazdaspeed3

Type: Compact 5-pass hatchback FWD
Price: $29,360
Engine: 2.3L I4 DOHC turbo
HP: 263 @ 5,500 rpm
Torque: 280 @ 3,000 rpm

Highlights

- High performance with civility
- Refined yet aggressive styling
- Excellent brakes
- Steering feel
- Cabin comforts

More or less unchanged for the '09 model year, the Mazdaspeed3 is a flat-out fun ride pretending to be a nice little hatchback.

Built off the well-equipped Mazda3 Sport GT model, the 'Speed3 shares many of the former's standard features, like ABS brakes, body-colour side mirrors, door handles and side mouldings, rain-sensing intermittent wipers, tilt/telescopic steering, air conditioning with micron filter and rear heater ducts, cruise control, six-way adjustable driver's seat with height adjustment and lumbar support, 60/40-split rear seat, two-stage front airbags plus front side-impact airbags and dual front/rear side curtain bags.

There's also a front centre console armrest with dual covered storage compartments, front door storage pockets with bottle holders, driver's side setback pocket, a rear centre armrest with two cupholders, and AM/FM audio with MP3 capability, steering wheel mounted audio controls, auxiliary audio input jack and a sporty roof antenna.

So, you'll get no argument here that the dynamic little 'Speed3 caters well to one's creature comforts and general driving pleasure.

But what really makes the difference between this four-door hatchback and the more mundane 156 horsepower Sport GT hatchback is a 2.3-litre turbocharged four-cylinder engine making 263 hp that nestles beneath the Mazdaspeed3's rakishly sloped hood.

If this engine's lusty 280 lb-ft of torque seems a lot to channel through the front wheels, you're right. That's why the engine management system modulates the torque in the six-speed manual transmission's lower gears — to help mitigate wheelspin and the torque steer that tugs the steering wheel in your hands.

Also helping to make this power more manageable are full-on performance tires — mounted on good-looking 18-inch alloy wheels — that stick like superglue. That and superb braking performance plus a lovely liveliness in the handling department make the 'Speed3 sheer delight to thread through the tightest turns.

Inside, the Mazdaspeed3 looks tasteful and neatly executed with a high-grade black-on-black interior and red stitching accents, exclusive trim elements and a nice arrangement of electroluminescent gauges that distinguish it from the remainder of the Mazda3 family. The Mazda's back seat is also a pretty comfortable place to lounge in.

Comfy back seat notwithstanding, the responsive Mazdaspeed3 is all about the driver. If other cars in this "hot hatch" class are satisfying to drive fast, the 'Speed3 is truly and deeply rewarding. At $29,360 it may be more expensive than some (though the '09 price is down from the 2008 model's $31,095), but as a performance driving tool for those who know how to use it, the Mazdaspeed3 is worth every penny.

Chevy reveals Cruze details

SEDAN The first photos of Chevrolet's all-new Cruze sedan reveal a dynamic four-door coupe that proves exciting design and value are not mutually exclusive.

An arching roof-line, extends from the steeply raked windshield to sloping rear pillars and short rear deck, bringing coupe-like proportions to the sedan that will ultimately replace the current Cobalt model.

Its purposeful stance with the wheels located at the outer edges of the taut-ly drawn bodywork, noticeably tight body panel fits and restrained use of exterior trim add to a high quality, "hewn from solid" appearance.

The Cruze will go on sale worldwide in 2009 — initially in Europe with a North American debut to follow — and will battle it out in the market against the Ford Focus, Honda Civic and similar products.

Living a Monk-like existence

TheTravelJunkie

Julia Dimonthetraveljunkie.ca

It's 3:45 a.m., and I've been awakened by the loud banging of a wooden percussion instrument. I slip into my itchy grey training suit and make my way blindly up a set of stone steps. At the top, a monk is ceremoniously striking a drum while sleepy tourists silently file into temple.

Here at the Lotus Lantern International Meditation Centre, a two-hour drive from Seoul, South Korea, visitors can spend a night experiencing the life of a monk. This 12-year-old temple complex was designed for foreigners looking to study Buddhism.

Tourists sleep on a traditional Korean cot, wake up at the crack of dawn, eat simple food, wash their own dishes, meditate and learn the philosophical principles of Zen Buddhism.

Though an overnight stay is short, the goal is to inspire visitors to learn more.

My introduction to monkhood begins in the golden temple with some early morning chanting. Breathing deeply, I take in my surroundings: the smell of incense, a gleaming gold statue of Buddha, the deep hum of meditative monks.

Reciting the "Bopsheen Jeeriohn," the monks prepare for their prostrations — 108 prostrations, to be exact. Hands pressed together, bending down to the kneeling position, I try to follow their lead.

I place my forehead to the floor and my palms on the ground. Part squat, part push up, part penitence, the prostrations are strenuous and hard on the knees. After 20, I start to question whether I can do all 108.

"The greater pain your body feels the heavier negative karma you have," reads a nearby sign. By this logic, I'm ridden with bad karma. Blood pumping and knees cracking, I continue to struggle with the prostrations while the monks perform their early morning ritual calmly and with ease. Clearly, I need some practice at this spiritual practice. From the temple, our group of wannabe monks move to the meditation room.

Sitting crossed-legged on a cushion, I sit up straight and try to clear my mind. "Meditation is a tool which helps us be present in the moment, rather than living in the past or the future," says Alexander, a Russian monk who's been studying here for the past five years. Counting my breaths in and out, I feel relaxed, my mind concentrated.

But my focus doesn't last long. A pesky mosquito buzzes around me like a kamikaze pilot, coming in for a crash landing.

Since Buddhists don't believe you should kill living creatures (blood-sucking mosquitoes included) I have no choice but to gently swat it away and try to regain my meditative focus.

Normally, my mind is continually making to-do lists, so meditation doesn't come easily. It's hard for me to imagine how monks such as Alexander are able to spend most of their days dedicated to the pursuit. After the experience, I realize that while I'm drawn to the philosophical principles of Buddhism (living in the present moment, renouncing desire for money and material objects) when I come face to face with worldly pleasures, I crack.

For example, the monks believe that food is meant to sustain the body for enlightenment rather than for enjoyment. But I'm not nearly disciplined enough to think of nirvana when faced with temporary indulgences like banana splits, bacon cheeseburgers or eggs Benedict.

Extra hollandaise sauce, please.

Big screen hits and misses

The Dark Knight delivered, the Love Guru disappointed this summer

BRIAN COULTON
for Metro Canada

Like a long-weekend barbecue, this past summer movie season delivered a smorgasbord that featured some inevitable winners and losers. There were thick, juicy grilled steaks like The Dark Knight ... and then there was the rank potato salad of The Love Guru.

So, as summer winds down, Metro looks back at some of these small victories and big flops, helping narrow down your autumn DVD rental/illegal Internet streaming choices.

Not happening — Up there with aliens and dead people, M. Night Shyamalan's The Happening pinpoints humankind's next logical fear: nature fighting back! Shyamalan tries to stay hip by addressing today's concerns of climate change through the thriller movie medium. The Happening fails in story, acting, concept and pretty much every avenue of suspense and Wahlberg's performance is less exciting than a Funky Bunch reunion.

Brotherly love — Will Ferrell resurrects his love-hate bromance with John C. Reilly in the hilarious Step Brothers. The duo prompts guffaws with their portrayal of grown men living at home, creating the hell for their parents children from five through 25 typically do. Ferrell expresses exaggeration without going over the top, bringing us back to his Zolander days.

Trade in the Ford — Oh, how Harrison Ford must need a paycheck. Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull sees the Ford trudge through the jungle on a journey to replace an ancient quartz skull to its home. As if the introduction of interdimensional aliens wasn't enough of an indication that this franchise has seen one too many renewals, Jones's secret life-saving weapon — a refrigerator — surely is.

Knight is king — Even if you detest action films and/or comic book adaptations, it's difficult to knock The Dark Knight. While Christian Bale's Batman sounds like a cross between Yoda and Godfather, Don Corleone, at least Heath Ledger's Joker pulls a posthumous punch as the film's antagonist. At times chillingly un-Ledger-like, his performance sets a certain villainous precedent for future arm hair-raisers.

Chopra wannabe — Mike Myers' The Love Guru sees Myers as Guru Pitka, trying to crack the American self-help industry. The Guru is unfunny, an unparalleled character to Austin Powers and simply unfortunate. With childish genital jokes and awkward-in-a-bad-way comedic attempts by Jessica Alba and Justin Timberlake, The Love Guru is less than transcendental. The Love Guru pokes fun at Canadians worse than a Just For Laughs Gags marathon.

Sometimes life imitates TV

PALINDROME: Republican presidential candidate John McCain's choice of Alaska governor Sarah Palin as his running mate has fuelled a media frenzy that hasn't exactly been edifying to watch. First of all there was a seedy rumour suggesting that Palin had faked her recent pregnancy to cover for her oldest daughter's maternity, a rumour that was duly rubbished when news broke that the same 17-year-old daughter was actually pregnant.

The first breathless rumour was actually a plot-line from the recent season of Desperate Housewives, and it's not the only attempt made in the last week to describe Palin and McCain with a vocabulary of TV metaphors. The Boston Globe ran a "separated at birth" comparison between the Republican candidates and Col. Tigh and President Lara Roslin from Battlestar Galactica, which was kinda clever when you looked at four carefully chosen photos placed next to each other, and contemplated the whole "junior member of executive branch suddenly thrust into position of leadership" meme that seems to fascinate everyone.

Of course, you'd have to overlook the inconvenient childlessness of Roslin versus the apparent superfecundity of Palin, and try to forget that McCain has both of his eyes, hasn't killed his wife for spying, and isn't a Cylon. But don't try to tell that to the Democrats. Frankly, this is all getting too geeky for me — let's move on.

Next in line was writer and producer Rod Lurie speculating to the Hollywood Reporter that the Republican party owes him a credit for the McCain/Palin ticket, as it's an eerie echo of Commander In Chief, his ABC series starring Geena Davis as the first female president that was cancelled during its first season three years ago.

"It's unbelievable isn't it?" said Lurie. "I think that Geena and I need to be paid royalties by the Republicans."

Lurie, an Obama supporter, should have paused before hitting the cocky button, since his prophetic role is dependent on McCain winning and dying in office, necessitating the unprecedented swearing-in of his vice-president.

It would also help if Palin was a liberal Democrat, parachuted in to support a weak Republican campaign, and not a pro-life, pro-gun Republican like Palin.

During its brief lifespan, Commander In Chief was both celebrated and criticized for being preemptive propaganda for a Hillary Clinton presidential run that was once presumed to be a sure thing — it seems like so long ago now, doesn't it?

Of course, if you buy Lurie's logic, he should be paying royalties to Geraldine Ferraro.

Supersize vs Superskinny

If Morgan Spurlock has a problem with that title, they can always change it to "Trading Plates." In each episode of this new series, a British import, an overweight person switches diets for five days with someone who could stand to put on a few pounds. In the end, each is given a sensible diet to follow, but in the meantime, the idea is to teach them that there are other ways to eat besides too much or too little. LeAnn Rimes and husband ready for baby RELATIONSHIPS With their anniversary fast approaching, LeAnn Rimes and Dean Sheremet knew just how to scratch their "seven-year itch": with a party — and soon, perhaps, a baby, People.com reports.

"We're ready, definitely," says Rimes, adding that they've gotten some friendly nudging from their pal and new dad Keith Urban.

Says Rimes: "He's encouraging us to start gettin' on it!"

The country star and her husband invited 30 of their closest friends to celebrate their upcoming seventh wedding anniversary — and Rimes' 26th birthday on Aug. 28 — at the Calistoga

Ranch in California's Napa Valley.

"We wanted to remember how blessed we are, and how excited we still are about each other," says Rimes, who was just 19 when she wed Sheremet, now 27, on Feb. 23, 2002. (They decided to celebrate early to take advantage of the warm weather and Rimes's birthday.)

The three-day festivities culminated with a seven-course dinner and an evening of dancing on Saturday night.

"My ankles and my feet hurt because I was jumping around on the dance floor so much!" she says.

Piven's 'antics' cost him

CAREER Entourage star Jeremy Piven has been forced to deny his "diva" antics cost him the job of hosting a forthcoming fashion event in New York, imdb.com reports.

The actor hosted Fashion Rocks in 2007 but this year he has been replaced by Rescue Me star Denis Leary, amid rumours that Piven's outlandish demands infuriated staff at last year's event.

METRO NEWS SERVICES

A source tells New York Post gossip column Page-Six that the star demanded a separate backstage green room and insisted on rewriting the script at the last minute.

"(Piven) was a nightmare," the source says. "And it wasn't even funny. (This year will see) a more trustworthy and mature host."

Newton refuses film kiss due to illness

MOVIE Thandie Newton refused to film her sex scene with Gerard Butler in RocknRolla because he was ill, femalefirst.co.uk reports. The actress, who plays accountant Stella in Guy Ritchie's new movie, insisted the scene didn't involve her kissing him after she realized how sick Butler was.

"This makes no sense at all..."

by Joe O'Neill

Justin Timberlake isn't in a rush to wed his girlfriend Jessica Biel.

Duly noted. So I've been watching my mailbox for an invitation lately in vain. I'm not going to be fooled by JT again, after those years with Cameron Diaz came to naught. It's fairly clear that his people want you to believe he's not the marryin' kind, he's too busy bringin' sexy back, whatever that means. Kind of a Frank Sinatra but with more hair and less Nelson Riddle Orchestra.

What really interests me about this story is that Joey Fatone is the messenger. What's Joey really thinking as he relates this news? Is he happy the press still talks to him? Is he thinking this is a role he has to accept in life, being the 'N Sync band guy who people ask about Timberlake? Is this all because his name spells out "fat one?"

Fatone says "...if it ain't broke don't fix it" about JT's relationship with Biel, but he should know that something is broken, and it's his career. He should be asking his people when he's going to be the guy they're talking about in connection with some impossibly hot starlet.

He's got to stop taking those calls that say, "Joey, we need you to talk to a reporter to deny that Timberlake is cheating."

If fame is the desirable mate to be wooed, Joey Fatone is in danger of becoming the perennial nice guy who never gets any.

No rush for Justin

MARRIAGE Justin Timberlake is in no rush to wed girlfriend Jessica Biel, according to his former 'N Sync bandmate Joey Fatone, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The singer has been romancing the actress since early last year, when she joined him at the Sundance Film Festival in Utah.

But according to Fatone, Timberlake isn't planning to wed Biel in the near future, despite taking their relationship much more seriously than his former flames.

"I think he finally met somebody that he wants to spend the rest of his life with," Fatone says. "You never know (about an engagement), but I don't know if it's the appropriate time right now. You know what, I think he is just playing it by ear. If it ain't broke don't fix it."

Biel herself appears to be in no rush to walk down the aisle. Adding to Us Weekly in a recent interview, she says: "The actual idea of signing those papers and doing all this stuff... I've never been someone who's like, 'I have to, have to, have to have it.'"
